LOUISVILLE JOURNAL

GENERALS SCOTT AND MCCLELLAN. -Col. Forney in one of his "Occasional" lettere to his Philadelphia Press says few men have been more fortunate than Winfield Scott. He has lived that he will enter at once upon the practice of the and has suctained a relation to events that have honors ebreed. In spite of the harriers that opno perallel in human annals. Bern in the yeer pose the progress of mere talent, however great 1786, he has grown with the growth and strengthened with the strength of our republican experiment. It has been a strength of the strength ment. If his infant eyes opened upon the dawn-ing glories of the Republic, the failing vision of standing enough the foremost members of the his latter days beholds a fralricidal etrife which mey bury that Republic lu a blocdy sepulchre.

Too young to take any part in the revolution, he days almost without a required to the Chief Justiceship of the charge lungth without a line of the charge lungth with the charge lungth without a line of the charge lungth with the charge lungt a native of Virginia, and in majestic ber or petitioner believed his chances seeme in-harmony with the example of Weshing-ton, he retires from a field made luminous by his own great decis—followed by the grateful prayers and praises of loyel millions; clothed with the proud consciousness. proud consciousness that his reputation is as the past few yeers. In ell the "causes celebres" which have ewekened interest here he has figured Ished by his countrymen among their most pre-cious memorials. It was impossible that a citizen defence. The conduct of the case against Peiwho imbibed hie first lessons of petriotism et the fresh fountain of constitutionel liberty should not committed to him. In the prosecution of Berrecoil from the pelluting breath of treason. It murd for conspiracy against the life of Louis Na-would have been nunaturel if the contemporary of poleon he led for the defence, and his eloquent many of our most illustrious tages and heroes should have been tempted from the path in which they trod, by the degenerate ingretes who boast of leing the descendants of men whose teachings they daily dishenor and discard. The armed conspirators hed an early and die-tinctive distrust and dread of Winfield Scott.

They shrank eppalled before the austerity and lignity of his virtues, and when, under the Administration of Pierce and Buchanan, they begon the plot which since has ripened into rebellion, their first step was to esnd the battle-scarred varrior away from his post, in Washington-to esclude him in New York—to surround him with epies—to deprive him of many of his privileges—to nake him a mera effigy-a titular and powerless dignitary-the representative of outhority with-out influence to exercise it. The authors of this agie-eye would detect their intrigues; they knew would expose their designe to the American peowhich they protoribed, embarrassed, and exiled baldi was saved from pursuing the mad course roubles, te drove their emissary from his preejected their offer and renewed bis fealty to his dent Buchanan, that that most disloyal public and gave back to him the power which Davis and Floyd had so perseveringly and malignantly withheld from him. President Lincoln promptly onfirmed the reluctant act of his predecesso Sotwithstending the weight of years that bowed his frame, and comewhat impaired his great intellee ual powers, Gen. Scott's presence, his counsel, hie bed and frequent denugelation of the traitors, his readiness, to use his own language to offer his life as a sacrifica to his country, and especially the manner in which he trample ander foot the pestilential heresy of State rightsall these impired the popular heart, strengthened the arm of our new Executive and his constitutional edvisers in the midst of the perils of a dis-fencatbet could have resulted, probably, from the example of no other living man. The experience of Winfield Scott touches the two extremes of American progress and civiliza-tion. The experience of George B. McClellan bis illustrious predecessor has ettained, assumes ssembled on the face of the earth, to vindicete popular liberty against an unexempled neurpation and an unperalleled despotism. Gen. Scott also won high position et a very early age. He was a Brevet Major General when but twenty-eight years old. The Precident, thoroughly conversant with the characteristics of one who resided in his own Stete of Illinois for several cears, and wisely catching the spirit that honarmy, that "they etumble who run fast," and have reigned had it not been for martial law. his youthful auccessor seems disposed to imitate him—at least in this respect. While the latter Gazette which add::

and we do not doubt that it is written in the horsecope of McClellen that he will be equal to the exacting expectations of his countrymen, and to the shining fame of his world-tenowned predecessor.

Great fire in St. Louis — The most destructive fire of the present year in St. Louis occurred on Thursday morning. The iarge four-story bag factory, located on the lovee, between Howard and Mullanphy streets, known as Blane's factory, took fire shortly after seven o'clock, and in the short space of half en hour was entirely consmed. The basement amounting to $20,000 more, while the extensive mechinery was valued at over $85,000. The main loss falls upon Mr. John C. Bull, principal owner of the machinery, end of the immense stock of hemp. But a small portion of his great loss was covered by insurance.

In the negro boy come to the house and enquired in the base and threath was in. I told him that he was on the plentation somewhere, whon the boy immediation of the section of the plentation somewhere, who the boy immediately caught held of use, kicked me out of the house and and breest until he supposed I west dank to the stage and threw it against the wall, killing it instantly. I what is against the wall, killing it instantly. I what is a second time, leaving me dead, as he supposed on the love, between Howard and Mullanphy streets, known as Blane's factory, took fire chortly after even o'clock, and in the short space of half en hour was entirely consmed. It would be curious to collect in one large do it. And a multiple of the whole would fall equally short. It is a most unnatural, uncalled for, and causeless war.

Two friends, some months ago, engaged in the enumeration and analysis of the causes of the war, proposed to each other this question: "If called upon to name one or two of the ost influential causes, what are they?" The one, a distinguished lawyer and expeenced politician, without any hesitation, replied: "The firm, the fixed resolve of leading Sonthern politicians, formed more than thirty years ago, that they would never submit to the central Government, when an uncompromising Northern man should be placed at its Thirty years ago they distinctly foresaw, that, by reason of the rapid increase of the Northwest, the sceptre of power would sooner or later pass out of their hands. And then and there they formed a resolution, from which they have never for one moment swerved, that, rather than submit to it, they would dash tho Federal Government in pieces. There can be no reason to question the action of England and France; they will rigidly adhere to that policy of nouninterference in our domestic quarrel which has been determined upon and proclaimed by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of both Governments.

When the doom of the chief actors in the present rebellion is to be pronounced, it may be done in their own words, and upon no one would they fall with a heavier curse than John C. Breckinridge. When the Chief actors in John C. Breckinridge. When the dol capitol building to the new extension, he, then presiding as Vice President, made a speech, replete with felicitous allusions to the past and patriotic hope for the future, and in it he saked: "Is there one who will deride his country's laws, perverther Constitution, or slicenate her people?"

Let John C. Breckinridge repeat the equestions to the same memorable occasion, he recorded it in these words: "If there be such a man, let his memory descend to postority laden with the same memorable occasion, he recorded it in these words: "If there be such a man, let his memory descend to postority laden with the same time of the process of the process of the same time of the process of the process of the same time of the process of and sees p-fined as well as military results in what he orders. Green Clay, Esq., the son of Brutus clay, of Bourhon, has published a vigorous and eloquent letter on the war, from which we take the following extract:

We have at the head of the nation, whatever else may be said of him, a true man, and we have a guarance of his hedelity in the army at his com-mand. This army, in its organization, is anima-ted by the one desire to maintain, the Government, in present of which I are the said of the conmand. This army, in its organization, is animated by the one desire to maintain the Government, in proof of which I appeal to their actions and their conduct. Are they the disorganizers that some represent them to be? Do they bring among us murder, rapine, and plunder? Have they desolated fields and burned the homes of effenceless women and children? I had an opportunity at Washington and elsewhere to see something of the officers and more; I heard from them no vocumous outputing of hate, but all spoke with the calm determination to maintain the Government and no hing more. They seemed much more conservative than those left at bome. Even should the present administration ahandon the cause for which 400,000 men have sprung to the field, the army and navy, the bone and rinew of the nation in this emergency, would not sustain them in their new position, and consequently they would be powerless for harm.

It is clear than to my mund, from every point of viow, that Kentucky abould move fearleasly and with vigor. Finerystic action at the outset may cave the exertice of themsands of lives. I repeat, the question is the unpersone one of self-preservation and must weigh down all others. I have classmater, associates, friends, relatives, either imprisoned, in mulitary existed, or in the OPENING A COTTON PORT.-The New York turnal of Commerce says the naval expedition has a double object to accomplish—first, to obtain a foothold on Southern soil within striking distance of the chief strongholds of the rebellion; and second, to open a port for the egress of the cotton crop. The latter, if successful in its obects, will be a grand point gained, especially as removing the temptation to foreign interference for the relief of the laboring classes in Europe. The Confederate Government will, of course, oppose all its atrength to efforts for this object, as it has good reason to apprehend the consequences of uch a measure. No doubt the most extreme War Matkelal with the Reference at the Wills. Many villages have been overwhelmed, with great loss of cattle, and even of human life. The greater part of the standing crep of Indian corn is stated to be lost. Granaries, both covernment and private, have been fooded, and already it is aid there is an intention to probibit the further exportation of grain from Alexandria. From the cotton districts, where the process of picking the first ripe pods had communed, there are account of heavy losses, sufficient to make a material difference in the extent of the crop, an event to be particularly deplored at the present time. One account ease that the loss of cotton will reach at least one third of the entire amount. It will take months to rapair the railroads.

WHY NEWS IS NOT RELIABLE. The New Trik Times says.

A Government censor is kept in the telegraph office at Washington to inspect all communications, and suppress whatever he mey deem inexpedient to publish. On the night after the battle at Bul Run, the editor placed in the telegraph office a perfectly accurate statement of the result derived from his personal observation; the Government agent refused to allow it to be sent, and reported instead that our army had achieved a victory. After the Edwards Ferry affair, the Government refused to transmit messages from special correspondents on the spot, and sent a despatch of their own, giving a view of the battle, which the facts subsequently developed did not sustain. An intense jealousy has been felt of the Press in official quarters, and every possible effort has been made to prevent any revelations through it a agency, which might betray tha strength or disposition of our forces, the weakness of our positions, the intentions of our Government, or any other facts of which the enemy could make the ellightest use.
